

Echoes in the dark

Chapter 1 by deep blue sea

The cry of the sea never felt more familiar. With each advancing wave, the memories of that day were flooding in. Every word broke down on me like the lightning of the storm. Betrayal enveloped my world like an unexpected breeze. As I stood there once again, I could only hope to withdraw from the fierce wringing hands of truth in a dark world.

"They will come for you again, you know." A quiet voice broke into my thoughts from behind me. I stood still pretending not to hear him. He couldn't see my face though he knew what was going in my mind. And I hated him for that.

"I'm not going to leave just because of some mistake." I said firmly though realizing the stupidity soon after I said it. "And we're not even sure of it" I quickly added.

"Like you need more proof than that. He is not going to give up that easily"

"Neither do I." I replied.

Silence held between us once again allowing the sound of the sea to break in.

"It doesn't matter anymore. He won't have to wait long for what he wants." I turned to hear his reply but he was already meters away, with his back turned, leaving behind only his footprints in sand for me to gaze upon.

I followed as the dark clouds gave in to rain as it broke down darting upon the shore.
